Appendix 2

Suggested Alternatives and Questions to Be Considered by FI in Determining the Most Effective Type of Requirements Document for Their Use

NOTE: ORR wishes to prepare a requirements document (or series) which will fill the gaps in ORR interests as revealed by the list of requirements in Appendix 1, Paragraph 7. These documents should be in a form most likely to be of interest and use to FI requirements officers, case officers, Chiefs of Missions or Bases, reports officers, or any other personnel which FI feels should have such a document in order to improve the collection and processing of positive intelligence. They could probably be revised every 12 to 18 months.

1. Would any of the examples listed in Appendix 1, Paragraph 7 serve as a model in format?

a. If so, should ORR simply use a standard title [e.g., Economic (or Geographic) Intelligence Collection Brief on in Poland, 1957"] and prepare a series to cover its interests over a period of time?

b. Should they be prepared and handled as separate cases with separate references, or

c. Should they all be part of a single unit for each country and prepared in loose-leaf form so that those recipients who so desire could maintain a "Handbook" on a particular country, or

d. Would you prefer to receive one complete document prepared for one country rather than a series of short ones on the country?

2. Can the requirements in any of the cases listed in Appendix 1, Paragraph 7 serve as models ^(for content) for those in the planned document?

a. Should the requirements consist only of the "highlights" of ORR interest in the subject with complete reliance for detailed requirements placed on the FI solicited requirements for a specific source?

4. In view of the duplication of ORR's interests and requirements on the European Satellites, would a combined volume be useful for "reference"?

5. Is physical size (number of pages) important in making such documents most useful? Would many potential users not use them if any one document is longer than ten pages, for example?

6. Would these documents be of most value for certain specific countries of the Sino-Soviet Bloc? If so, which ones?
